Hello Sir Knights, Family and Friends,

As I sit here in the Airport waiting for my flight to Washington D.C. for the Sunrise Service, I find time to reflect. Life gets so busy and hectic that we tend to get razor focused on the tasks before us but forget to notice the life around us. Work is always the number one thing to do this, but so is normal life. Cleaning on your day off, grocery shopping, doing the dishes and laundry. Home or car repair is another. Sometimes it can seem like a never ending cycle.

So why do I bring this up on Easter Saturday? Because it is around these important days of remembrance we must make every effort to break those habits and remove those blinder that are keeping us from seeing what is truly around us and what we are blessed with. For me, at this moment, Easter is tomorrow. I will be in Washington D.C. joining so many of our fellow Sir Knights in the Sunrise Service to celebrate the resurrection of our Lord and Savior. This is truly an experience that if viewed in the greater picture, is impactful and meaningful. It is an opportunity to celebrate his gift to us, and create a memory unlike many others. Yes, it can be stressful getting there, delayed flights, waiting for a shuttle, your room not being ready or having to wait for the elevators, but that isn't the whole picture. The Sir Knights and conversations, the stories and laughter, those fill out the whole picture.

When we are at home having to do the dishes or laundry or cleaning the house, do we see what else we have. I find pride we can take from our own good work is a blessing in my mind. I try not to make it just work. I will turn on the radio and have my daughter help and break out in song in the middle of the work. Why? Because I refuse to let the humdrum work of life define my life. You cannot and should not let it define yours. Sing that song, dance that dance, or just enjoy the feel of the sun on your face while mowing the lawn.

We see that in Templary and Masonry in general too. Yes we need to learn that part and all those rehearsals are a pain, but what about the pride you feel at doing your part well, and impressing the newest Sir Knights in your Commandery. What about the time with your brothers and hopefully a nice meal with them too, more blessings we don't always see, yet they are there right in front of us.

Jesus while he ministered on earth taught those who would listen to see the world, not just a part. To see their fellow men and women as brothers and sisters. He taught faith and love of all. He, I would like to believe, saw the world as a whole, not being distracted by the minor things in life that distract you from what is important, what is truly beautiful in this world. He wanted to give us the gift of seeing more than we might see.

So, while my journey may come with its problems and distractions, it comes with blessings when looking at everything. Yes I have to wait for a plain, then the shuttle, and perhaps my ride, but I get an adventure, and new people to talk to. I am away from my daughter and family, but I have a flight back early enough to still join my family on Easter to share my new stories with. I get to spend a day with friends I may not have seen since last year and share our stories of life. Yes, you could say this is looking at the world through rose colored glasses, but is it? Or is it realizing that all isn't just the task before me, that there are blessings hidden in all that we do.

As you all will be reading this after Easter, I hope that it was a Blessed Day for you and those you were with. I hope that you had the opportunity to sit with loved ones and friends. To enjoy a meal, or watch the kids find their eggs and baskets. Feel the sun on your face and to share a good story and an even better laugh. Find the enjoyment in all that you do in life. While there is the stresses of what needs to be done, find the blessing in each of them and celebrate everything.

Fraternally,
